The purpose of this study is to review Secret Agents and the Memory of Everyday Collaboration in Communist Eastern Europe, edited by Péter Apor, Sándor Horváth, and James Mark and Antropologia donosu [Anthropology of Denunciation] edited by Jarosław Syrnyk and Rober Klementowski. The review focuses on the political circumstances of the founding of institutes of memory in Eastern Europe, their differing research approaches and dealing with the communist past. In its second part, different patterns of collaboration and forms of refusal are analyzed.
